

6. KID GRETZKY

A simplistic image in photographic technique, and popularized by its appearance in the Photo District News in 2000, this image of an 18-year-old Wayne Gretzky has been used countless times throughout the past 30 plus years.

7. SELANNE PUCK TOWER

'The 30th try is a winner.' One cliché that finally worked out is the shot of players knocking the pucks off the boards to start their pregame practice. Here, future Hall of Famer Teemu Selanne hits the pucks with the same precision that he has used to score more than 700 goals in the National Hockey League, thereby creating the perfect symmetry.

8. BOSSY ON FIRE

Funny what a little cotton and kerosene can do for an image. One of the NHL's most prolific scorers, Mike Bossy of the New York Islanders, posed for a few frames that I shot for a cover that was commissioned by The Hockey News in 1980.

9. WHEN STARS COLLIDE

Capturing big hits on the ice is great, but capturing two of the league's biggest stars is even better. Known for his patented hip check among other things, Denis Potvin nails Montreal's star forward Guy Lafleur in an open ice hit – something we don't see often enough in the NHL these days.

10. MCDONALD'S MAGIC MOMENT

Technically this isn't a great shot, and it is kind of tough selling images of a guy with his eyes closed. But in 1989 when superstar forward Lanny McDonald finally realized his dreams of winning the Stanley Cup, this image told it all. His 'Field of Dreams' was a frozen one, and his lifetime goal of capturing hockey's Holy Grail had finally been achieved.
