

BRUCE BENNETT

DIRECTOR OF PHOTOGRAPHY, HOCKEY, GETTY IMAGES

Shooting hockey for 37 years has given Bennett more than one quick trigger finger—he's often juggling a handheld camera, remote cameras and strobe light controls. "Capturing the moment is about not losing focus, physically or mentally," he says. "But sometimes it's luck of the draw. I've often said to other photographers, 'If he skates your way, you win. If he skates my way, I win.'"

Of net-cam shots like this one from the Jets-Devils game on March 10 (below), Bennett says, "The element you look for most is the dejected goalie and the offensive player celebrating. Fans and clients love that." Left: A classic Bennett action shot from the Senators-Rangers playoff game on April 14, 2012.
