Whether it's the helmetless heroes of the bad old days or the multimillionaire superstars of the new NHL, Bruce Bennett has photographed them all: from Bob Gainey hoisting one of his four Stanley Cups in the 1970s, to a baby-faced Wayne Gretzky, a beloved Mario Lemieux, a too-hot-to-handle Mike Bossy, a bloody Mark Messier and ageless wonder Teemu Selanne. During lockouts and off-seasons, Bennett has also taken his talents off the ice to capture those a little lower on the payscale: from the rodeo, to the carnival, to the 2010 Winter Olympics in Vancouver and, mostly recently, the aftermath of Hurricane Sandy.
