From the department of Pretty Awesome Stuff comes these photos from last night's Capitals and Ducks game in Anaheim. Getty Images photographer Bruce Bennett brought an infrared camera with him to Honda Center and what he captured was, well, Pretty Awesome Stuff.

It might look like the University of North Carolina in the Dean Dome if they played hockey but that's NHL action. I can say this much: I'm digging the Ducks jerseys more in infrared than in color.

Basically just looks like black and white photography with a bit of baby blue, not "Pretty Awesome Stuff" at all.

I guess you'd have to have an interest in media arts to appreciate the use of infrared technique. I like the pics and think they give an old-time look to the players. I almost felt like I was looking at hockey on a B&W television.

You infer that I don't "have an interest in media arts to appreciate the use of infrared technique." and then do the exact same thing as me by comparing them to B&W imagery. Their interesting for a minute, just not "Pretty Awesome" -- B&W stills would have impressed me more.
